GLOBALISATION AS CHALLENGE FOR INDIA:
A GENDER PERSPECTIVE

*DHIRENDRA KUMAR JENA, PH. D SCHOLAR,
SMUTISMITA NAIK, M. PHIL SCHOLAR,

*DEPT. OF SOCIAL SCIENCE,
FAKIR MOHAN UNIVERSITY, NUAPADHI, BALASORE, ODISHA.

DEPT. OF SOCIAL SCIENCE,
FAKIR MOHAN UNIVERSITY, NUAPADHI, BALASORE, ODISHA.

ABSTRACT: Though globalisation has positive impact on some Northern countries it has badly affected the southern states. Owing to globalisation the economy of the country like India has seriously affected. The rural economy has been especially threatened. Further, it has been creating an illusion for the women over world especially in the developing countries. Externally, though it is seen that huge benefits go for the people at large but reality is different and the case of the women in developing countries especially India is pathetic. This paper examines the impact of globalisation on women especially in India. It highlights how globalisation becomes instrumental to impoverish the working women both in organised and unorganised sectors. It discusses the adverse impact of globalisation on every walks of women’s lives. Both informal as well as informal sectors women are victimised seriously. Their personal, social, economic, cultural life has been endangered. Especially, the women in rural informal agricultural sector and domestic servants in urban area have been mostly affected. They don’t feel safe in any working sphere. In short, women are affected in respect of her life like health, education, security, human rights etc due to globalisation).

KEY WORDS: globalisation, feminism, sustainability, human rights, vulnerability.

REFERENCES:

