ABSTRACT

This paper is an attempt to look at the vitality of inclusion of marginalized section of society for inclusive growth. It implies conferring benefits to each and every section of society. Empowering marginalized section catalyses economic growth. Over the past few decades in India, few parameters of inclusive growth have improved but some deep rooted challenges still remain pervades and are yet to be fully addressed. Marginality is an experience affecting millions of people throughout the world. Being poor, unemployed, discriminated against, or being disabled by a society that won't work around the problems of impairment; they all bring with them the risk of exclusion. In a developing country like India, besides being discriminated against the grounds of poverty, caste, sector, education gender, marginalized groups have come up with come up with greater intensity of psychological and sociological concerns. There is a need in our Indian society to review into these aspects. Not all individuals are being given equal opportunities and accessibility. Both the government and our society should delve into these issues pertaining to the vulnerable groups particularly on their behavioral, cognitive, emotional and social. Inclusion of all the sections of society is imperative for economic development. But to fulfill the promises words need to come to action. Mere policies will not create a paradigm change until unless, the deep seated attitude of society changes.

KEY WORDS: economic growth, empowerment, marginalization, inclusive growth, vulnerable groups
